Once, a donkey decided to dress up in a tiger skin. He had a great time scaring the other animals in the jungle.

Presently, he came upon a fox and decided to scare him too. So he roared as fiercely as he could. The fox burst out laughing and said, "If only you hadn't opened your mouth, I would have been scared, but as soon as I heard your bray, I knew at once you were only a donkey dressed up in a tiger's skin."

What you say and what you do must be in line; you may sit in the seat of authority, but if your actions belie the power bestowed upon you no one will respect your authority. Make sure you are not wearing only the outer garments of respect and authority.
